BYGONE DAYS OF BUCKTOWN

Bucktown sprang up more than a hundred years ago as a string of fishing and hunting camps lining Lake Pontchartrain and the 17th Street Canal, home to squatters who made their living from fishing, crabbing, hunting, trapping, boat rentals, bait sales, and the entertainment of vacationers.

Development of the area in the 1850's resulted in Lakeport, a commercial wharf and resort where steamboats docked at the entrance to the New Basin Canal (now Pontchartrain Blvd.) and the terminus of the Jefferson and Lake Pontchartrain Railroad, an extension of what is now the St. Charles Avenue streetcar line. The lake end of the railway featured a hotel, bowling alley, dance hall, picnic ground, pleasure garden, and bathing facilities, and later became the site of a famous amusement park known as West End.

During Prohibition, Bucktown gained notoriety for its speakeasies, houses of prostitution, and gambling, which was legal in "the free State of Jefferson." Not surprisingly, Bucktown's proximity to New Orleans ensured that its unrestrained gaiety was immortalized by musicians. Tunes like "Bucktown Bounce" by Johnny Wiggs and Jelly Roll Morton's "Bucktown Blues" capture the spirit of Bucktown during the birth of jazz. It was a rowdy, wide-open place of barroom brawls, supposedly named for the young bucks who came in search of fun and trouble, though some contend Bucktown's title refers to the region's deer hunting and still others claim it was named after local fisherman Oliver "Buck" Wooley.

Bucktown survived the hurricane of 1915 and 1947 and the encroachment of suburbs, remaining a center for fresh seafood. Deanie's was the first market built in Bucktown and one of the first to sell boiled seafood for retail in New Orleans. Today, Deanie's market, restaurants, and shipping services proudly carry the Bucktown tradition into the 21st century.
